Satellites

Geostationary communications satellites provide video, audio and data channels to broadcasters, cablecasters, telephone companies, business and government users, utilizing transponders to receive signals and relay them back to earth. These satellites offer users an economical method of transmitting signals great distances and to many places at once. Currently there are twenty-one satellites used by North American owners and operators.

Comsat is primarily engaged in providing satellite-based communications services and products. There are six components to the Corporation's business:

Rate-regulated Satellite Services includes all activities the Corporation undertakes to carry out its responsibilities under the Communications Satellite Act of 1962, as amended.

Comsat, as U.S. participant in the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (Intelsat) provides satellite services for communications principally between the United States and foreign points. It provides these services through the Intelsat satellites and eight U.S. earth stations.

Comsat is the U.S. participant in the International Maritime Satellite Organization (Inmarsat) which is establishing an internationally owned and operated global satellite system for maritime communications.

Non-Jurisdictional Satellite Systems Services includes activities the Corporation pursues through other satellite systems whether or not these activities are regulated by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

Through its subsidiary Comsat General Corporation, the Corporation leases the capacity of its Comstar satellites to AT&T for domestic communications, furnishes maritime communications services to the U.S. Navy, the British Royal Navy and Inmarsat through the Marisat system and provides technical services for satellite systems other than Intelsat and Inmarsat.

Through its Telecommunications Equipment segment, Comsat designs, manufactures and markets telecommunications equipment: shipboard terminals, echo cancellers and time-division multiple-access equipment; low-noise and medium-power, solid-state microwave amplifiers and related systems for the defense, electronics and commercial satellite communications industries.

Through Comsat's Information Services segment, its subsidiary Compact Software develops and markets computer-aided engineering tools for the microwave electronics industry. Environmental Research & Technology provides environmental consulting, planning, monitoring and computer-based information services to industry and government.

Through Direct Broadcast Satellite Services, Comsat's subsidiary Satellite Television Corporation is preparing to offer multiple channels of pay-TV programing. This entertainment and information service will be beamed directly from satellites to small antennas at the homes of subscribers. Business is scheduled to begin in the fall of 1984, initially serving residents in the northeastern United States.

Through the Satellite Business Systems partnership, satellite-based services are provided. These include long-distance telephone services; private communications networks, including international extensions, for large organizations.

GTE Satellite Corporation owns and operates three major earth stations in a domestic communications satellite system which is operated jointly with AT&T Long Lines and is integrated into the nationwide telephone network. This system currently utilizes four COMSTAR satellites of Comsat General Corporation and, beginning in 1983, will utilize the Telstar satellites now being built for AT&T. This system provides long-distance voice communications services within the contiguous 48 states, between Hawaii and the mainland, and between Puerto Rico and the mainland. In addition to handling long distance telephone calls, the system also provides a number of specialized services including high-speed data and television transmission and video conferencing.

On December 4, 1980, GTE Satellite Corporation received authorization from the Federal Communications Commission to construct and operate an advanced communications satellite system which will be known as the GSTAR system. Authorization was granted to construct three satellites for operation in the 12 and 14-gigahertz frequency band and to launch two of them. Construction of the satellites began during the 3rd quarter of 1981 by RCA Astro Electronics. The system is designed primarily to provide customized digital transmission networks, that will enable customers from business and government to transmit voice, data, image and message information. The system, planned to be operational in 1984, will provide communications services to all 50 states.

Intelsat is the 106 member-country organization that owns and operates the international satellite system which provides two-thirds of the worlds overseas telecommunications and nearly all overseas television.

RCA American Communications Inc. Four Research Way, Princeton, N.J. 08540. (609) 987-4069. Dr. J.J. Tietjen, pres; Harold W. Rice, VP video/audio svcs.

The RCA Satcom domestic satellite system offers data, voice, audio and video communications services to business, government and the electronic media. Seven Satcoms are in operation serving major radio networks, wire services, broadcast television networks, and cable television program distributors.

Satcom I-R carries the company's digital audio transmission service for radio networking and occasional TV. Satcom I and II carry voice and data traffic for commercial and government accounts, while Satcom V (Aurora) is owned by Alascom Inc., and operated under a joint agreement by RCA Americom to handle Alaska's long-distance intercity telephone traffic and the state's television service.

Satcom II-R will be used for expansion of voice and data services, and will take over much of the traffic now carried on Satcom I/II.

Each RCA Americom spacecraft carries 24-transponders. Satcom III-R and IV have TWTA amplifiers providing 5.5 and 8.5 watts of power. Satcoms V, I-R and II-R have solid state power amplifiers with 8.5 watts of power.

Radio and Television Audiences

Radio and Television were in more U.S. homes than ever before as 1985 approached.

Radio. The Radio Advertising Bureau estimated that 84.6 million U.S. homes, 99.0%, were radio-equipped as of Jan. 1, 1983.

Radio Sets. The number of working-order radio sets in the U.S. totaled 478.7 million in January 1983, according to estimates by the Radio Advertising Bureau. RAB estimated that 355.0 million of these were home and personal radio sets and 123.7 million were out-of-home receivers.

Television. A total of 84.9 million homes, or 98% of all U.S. homes (excluding Alaska and Hawaii) were TV equipped as of January 1, 1985, according to A.C. Nielsen Company.

Color TV. Homes equipped with color TV sets totaled 77.66 million, or 91% of all TV homes, as of Jan. 1, 1985, according to A.C. Nielsen Company estimates.

Viewing and Listening. The extent to which radio and television sets were used as indicated in the tables that follow. The television figures were furnished by the Nielsen company and its Nielsen Television Index (NTI). The radio data came from RAB and other sources as noted.

*Prior to 1971, data reflects factory sales by U.S. manufacturers plus those products imported directly by distributors or dealers for resale. All import statistics are based on average value as published by the U.S. Department of Commerce, which ios F.O.B. and therefore excludes U.S. import duties, freight charged from the foreign country to the U.S. and insurance.

Note: Dollar volume figures represent total considerations reported for all transactions, with the exception of minority interest transfers in which control of the license did not change hands. All sales have been approved by the FCC. Also, prior to 1978, a combined AM-FM facility was counted as one station in computing the total number of stations traded.

* Prior to 1971 figures represent total number of deals involving both radio and television stations.  Beginning in 1971, when the FCC's "one-to-a-customer" rule, prohibiting the sale of co-located TV and radio stations, became effective, figures represent the total number of separately located TV and radio stations that were sold in packages.
